Dunwody family papers, 1804-1948 SCHS# 0624.00

Description: 1.5 linear ft.

Historical/Biographical Note: Born in Washington, Georgia, James Bulloch Dunwody (1816-1902) was the son of planter John Dunwody (1786-1858) and Jane Bulloch Dunwody (1788-1856). After graduating from Yale, he studied law briefly but then attended the Presbyterian Seminary in Columbia, S.C. He spent a year in England and subsequently served as a missionary in the Cherokee region of Georgia. He was ordained in Charleston, S.C. in 1845, and his first pastorate was at Pocotaligo. He later pastored in Barnwell, S.C., Washington, Ga., and Walterboro, S.C., and also served as a chaplain in the Confederate Army. He was married three times, first to Laleah G. W. Pratt (1823-1853), secondly to Ellen Galt Martin (1823-1857), and lastly to Caroline (Carrie) Indiana Hagood (1838-1894). Among his children were Laleah (Lily) Georgiana Dunwody Waddell (1844-1919), John Henry Dunwody (1852-1918), James B. Dunwody, Jr. (1862-1903), Ina Dunwody Savage (1860-1924), Hetty Augusta Dunwody (1867-1897), and Mary Theodora Dunwody (1877-1927). Ina Dunwody Savage's daughter Annie married Richard (Dick) Manning Jefferies, a Walterboro attorney, state legislator, and governor of South Carolina (1942-1943).

Scope and content: Collection consists of papers of the Dunwody family, principally the family of Rev. James Bulloch Dunwody, including correspondence, estate records, writings, and miscellaneous items. Correspondents of early letters [1804]-1849, include Esther Dunwody (grandmother of James B. Dunwody), James B. Dunwody, Jane Bulloch Dunwody, Mrs. Laleah G. W. Pratt Dunwody, and Jane Marion Dunwody Erwin. Correspondence of the 1850s include a letter, 25 July 1851, from Laleah G. W. Pratt Dunwody in McPhersonville, S.C. to her mother in which she writes about the Presbyterian church in McPhersonville, health problems, and agitation for secession in South Carolina. There are several love letters, 1859, between James B. Dunwody and his wife Carrie, one of which mentions their infant daughter. Wartime correspondence, 1861-1863, includes two letters of Henry Macon Dunwody (brother of James B. Dunwody) writing from a camp near Fredericksburg, Va. Other correspondence of this period concerns his death in battle at Gettysburg in 1863, including a letter written by his widow Matilda E. Dunwody describing her grief and her late husband's "Christian virtues." Two letters from Joseph E. Maxwell in Early County, Ga. to James B. Dunwody concern tax and financial matters, and mention "the Sleepy Hollow house," which is to be sold. In the first postwar letter, [1865], Mrs. Sophronia Lucia Palmer Hutson writes to her friend Laleah (Lily) Dunwody about her daughter's marriage to Sanders Glover, and responds to Lily's apparent discouragement about conditions in South Carolina. She also relates that her husband, William Ferguson Hutson, visited Beaufort and told the Northerners occupying the town that they were robbers and had no right to be there.

Correspondents of the 1870s include James B. Dunwody, Mrs. Jane M. Alexander (James B. Dunwody's sister), Marion Alexander Boggs, James O. Hagood, and Matilda E. Dunwody. A letter, 18 Nov. 1870, from James O. Hagood concerns his son James R. Hagood, who died as a result of a railroad accident. Correspondence of the 1880s includes letters of Ina Dunwody Savage in Walterboro as well as letters of James B. Dunwody, Jane Marion Alexander, Alice van Yeveren Alexander Haskell, Isaac H. Means, and Laleah (Lily) Dunwody Waddell. Topics include the death of Adam Leopold Alexander (James B. Dunwody's brother-in-law), farming ventures in Florida by sons of James B. Dunwody, and the health and medical treatments of Carrie Dunwody and Hetty Dunwody. Correspondents of the 1890s include James B. Dunwody in Walterboro, Mary T. Dunwody, Ina D. Savage, Lily D. Waddell, James B. Dunwody, Jr., Johnson Hagood, and Marion B. Alexander Boggs. Topics include a visit to McPhersonville, family and friends in Walterboro, Carrie Dunwody's stay at Glenn Springs due to ill health, the death of Gen. Johnson Hagood, and William E. Boggs' resignation from the chancellorship of the University of Georgia in Athens. A letter, 14 May 1898, from James B. Dunwody to his daughter Lily Waddell mainly concerns his desire for a revival, and a "universal prayer" for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

Correspondence of the 20th century includes letters of the Savage and Jefferies families, Mary T. Dunwody, Marion Alexander Boggs, and Lily Waddell. Of note are letters, 1903-1905, to Mary T. Dunwody from Sophronia (Sophie) Glover Caldwell; and letters of condolence, 1912, to Ina D. Savage regarding the death of her husband Charles A. Savage. Other topics include the deaths of James B. Dunwody and Lily D. Waddell.

Estate records chiefly pertain to the estates of Lily D. Waddell and Ina D. Savage. There are also estate records [1863] of Henry Macon Dunwody, which include a "Slave Inventory of Estate of H. M. Dunwody." Other family papers include a marriage settlement, 1842, for James B. Dunwody and Laleah G. W. Pratt; insurance policies; calling cards; memorials and obituaries; genealogical notes; report cards for the Walterboro Graded School; and clippings. Writings include "A Sketch of the Walterboro Library Club;" essays, 1917-1918, about Confederate history; and essays about literary figures and missionaries.

Photographs have been removed to the Visual Materials Collection. Photographs of identified individuals include images of Marion B. Alexander, Laleah (Lily) Dunwoody Waddell, and Emily Glover Caldwell.

Dunwody family correspondence:

- 1 Letter, [1804], from Esther Dunwody in Sunbury, Ga., to her son John Dunwody in New Haven, Conn. Esther Dunwody (1746-1812) was the first wife of John Dunwody (d. 1809). Her son John [Dean] Dunwody (1786-1858) was the husband of Jane Bulloch Dunwody (1788-1856) and the father of James Bulloch Dunwody (1816-1902). He owned Arcadia Plantation near Midway Church, and was a graduate of Yale (1807).
- 2 Letter, 23 Jan. 1806, from Esther Dunwody at Arcadia Plantation, to her son John at Yale. Also, and undated letter, 23 Dec. [1804?] from her to John.
- 3 Letter, 27 March 1810, to Mrs. John Dunwody, Arcadia, from her friend M. de Mere (Demere) in Savannah, Ga. Topics include Mrs. Dunwody's infant daughter Augusta, and friends and family in Savannah.
- 4 Letter, 2 Feb. 1828, from James B. Dunwody to his mother Jane B. Dunwody in Riceborough (Riceboro), Ga. (Liberty County). He apparently writes from a school in Lexington, Ga. Also, a letter, 2 April 1831, to "Master James Dunwody" in Riceborough from his cousin Caroline Dunwody at Hopestill regarding religious matters.
- 5 Letter, 17 Sept. 1838, from James B. Dunwody to his parents in Lebanon, Cobb County, Ga. He apparently writes from Lexington, Ga., where he has been studying law with "Colonel Lumpkin."

- 6 Letter, 24 Jan. 1840, to Mrs. Jane Dunwody, Walnut Grove, Ga., from [S.] Gould at Riceboro. Gould was apparently a teacher at Walnut Grove School. She writes about her departure due to ill health, and her memories of Walnut Grove (a plantation or town?).
- 7 Letter, 11 Oct. 1843, from James B. Dunwody in Essex, Conn., to his parents in Lebanon, Ga. It mainly concerns the birth of a daughter and her precarious health, and his wife's difficult delivery. His first wife was Laleah G. W. Pratt Dunwody (1823-1853).
- 8 Letter, 3 Aug. 1844, from Mrs. Laleah G. Dunwody in Tuscaloosa, Ala., to her sister Mrs. J. Martin Erwin in Lebanon, Ga. regarding the loss of a daughter (Jane), her expectation of another child, and other family matters. The recipient is Jane Marion Dunwody Erwin, whose first husband was Rev. Stanhope W. Erwin (d. 1840).
- 9 Letter, 25 Jan. 1847, Laleah G. Dunwody in McPhersonville, S.C. to "My Dear Mother" (her mother-in-law Mrs. John Dunwody in Roswell, Ga.). Also, a letter, 17 March [1849] from C. A. Dunwody in Savannah to his mother Mrs. John Dunwody in Roswell.
- 10 Letter, 19 Sept. [1851], to "My dear Friend" from Ruth S. King in Columbia, S.C., regarding the friend's engagement.
- 11 Letter, 25 July 1851, from Laleah G. Dunwody in McPhersonville to "My dear Mother." She writes of unwelcome house guests, a 4th of July celebration, the Presbyterian church in McPhersonville, health problems, and agitation for secession in South Carolina. Also, a letter, 23 Oct. [1853], from Jane Marion Dunwody Glen (whose second husband was Dr. William Glen), partly concerning Laleah G. Dunwody, who is dangerously ill, and other family matters.
- 12 Letter, 11 Oct. 1855, from Jane Dunwody in Roswell to her granddaughter (probably Laleah Dunwody). Also, a letter, 26 June 1857, from Marion Glen in Roswell to her brother about their father's painful illness and other family matters. Also, a letter 5 June 1858, from Jane Marion Glen to her brother James B. Dunwody, mainly about their father's death.
- 13 Letter, 25 May 1859, is a love letter from James B. Dunwody in Washington, Ga. to his (third) wife Carrie (Caroline Indiana Hagood, 1838-1894). Love letter, June 1859, from Carrie Dunwody in Barnwell, S.C. to her husband. Love letter, 22 June 1859, James B. Dunwody to Carrie, who has been ill. Letter, 1 Dec. 1859, from James B. Dunwody in Washington to Carrie. Love letter, 1860, James B. Dunwody, which mentions their infant daughter.
- 14 Letter, 30 July 1861, from Henry Macon Dunwody to his niece Lily (Laleah G. Dunwody). He writes from "Blakeley Early Co." and mentions the first battle at Manassas and his preparations to go to war in Virginia. Letter, 10 Oct. 1860, from Carrie Dunwody in Washington, Ga. to her husband James B. Dunwody, who is in military service (as a chaplain?). Love letter, [1861], from Carrie to her husband.

- 15 Letter, 4 April 1863, Henry M. Dunwody to his brother James B. Dunwody, writing from “Camp near Fredericksburg.” He writes mainly about his will and wishes in regard to his estate in case of his death, mentioning his wife Matilda (Matilda E. Maxwell Dunwody). Letter, 31 May, Henry M. Dunwody near Fredericksburg, to his sister Mrs. James M. Glen in Roswell, Ga., about his promotion to the rank of major. The envelope is marked as the last letter he wrote to her. An undated note in pencil to Mrs. James M. Glen from A. L. Alexander reporting that he does not yet have the “particulars” of the death of Major Henry M. Dunwody. A note, 25 July [1863], from Confederate officer W. H. Alexander in Richmond informs A. L. Alexander (Adam Leopold Alexander) in Washington that Major Henry M. Dunwody was probably killed in action at Gettysburg. Letter, 22 July [1863], from Ruth Ann Atwood Dunwody (wife of William Elliott Dunwody) to her sister-in-law Mrs. James M. Glen, gives details about the death of Henry M. Dunwody. Letter, [1863], from Mrs. Matilda E. Dunwody to her sister-in-law [Jane M. Glen?] about her grief and her late husband’s “Christian virtues.” Unsigned letter, 28 Sept. 1863, possibly from James B. Dunwody to his wife, writing from Athens, Ga. about his health and concerns about matters at home. Two letters, 26 Nov. and 10 Dec. 1863, from Joseph E. Maxwell in Early County, Ga. to James B. Dunwody regarding tax and financial matters, and mentioning “the Sleepy Hollow house” which is to be sold.
- 16 Letter, 18 July 1869, from James B. Dunwody in Virginia to his wife. Letter, 30 July 1869, from M. Hagood (Indiana M. Allen Hagood) in Barnwell to her son-in-law [James B. Dunwody] mainly regarding the health of Carrie Dunwody and her children. Letter, 14 October [1865], Mrs. Sophronia Lucia Palmer Hutson (1814-1873), wife of William Ferguson Hutson (1815-1881), to Lily G. Dunwody (1844-1919), later Mrs. Joseph A. Waddell. It mainly concerns the marriage of her daughter Emily to Mr. Sanders Glover, and Mrs. Hutson also responds to Lily’s apparent discouragement about conditions in the state. Excerpt:

I am sorry to see you giving way to those feelings, so natural to all of us, upon the downfall of our cause. We must rise superior to this great calamity. We ought to feel it our glorious privilege to console the fathers, brothers and sons who have struggled so nobly and have been borne down only by the superior numbers & resources of the enemy; and the best consolation we can offer, is, to be as proud of their courage and endurance in the past as if they had succeeded, to cheer them on, in what is still left for them to do, and to urge them to continued and undying faith in the great principles for which they have contended. The proud record of that brief but deathless history which the States of the South enacted during the past four years, is of itself, a sweet memory which should sustain us thro all trials in the future and it does give our young men a lordly and defiant spirit to which our enemies may yet bow, for the struggle is not over! Though a contest with arms is over, there are left us, such resources of moral strength, intellect and political skill as give us prospects of putting some at least of the principles we advocate, into operation.

Here in South Carolina the gentlemen whom I know and honor, are by no means pocketing their hands and sinking into apathy. All are going to work in some way or other to rebuild their fallen fortunes. It is a sight that all the world might look at with admiration.

Let us not despair. It is our peculiar province to wait and trust, and so only can woman be man's helpmate, tempering his active and energetic nature with their calm confidence in results and firing him to exertion in the hour of gloom and apparent failure. Ask yourself if any true Southern man or woman ought to accept this present phase of God's will as his final dispensation towards us. We will yet be instrumental in his hands for great ends. All that we have to do, is to accept trustingly and reverently the new arena which he has given us to do battle in, and to take our new weapons with the same gallant spirit and enduring faith with which we waged the late contest.

Mr. Hutson has lately been to Beaufort and saw a great deal of the boasting nation. He told them some very plain things: that they are robbers and had no right to be there; that their educational boasts are ignorant and inaccurate. All this he proved to them in business transactions. He visited a merchant in Mr. Jno. Smith's house & told him he would have to give it up, & that Yankees had no business there, also that they had no right to run for the legislature. He corrected a school marm's spelling who offered to copy, and found innumerable mistakes in the accounts of N.Y. merchants. So much for superiority!

- 17 Letter, 6 May 1870, from a lady in Savannah, Ga. to an unnamed recipient, regarding family and friends. Letter, 18 May 1870, from Mrs. Jane M. Alexander in Washington, Ga. to her niece Lily G. Dunwody in Staunton, Virginia, where Lily is apparently teaching at a school (probably the Augusta Female Seminary, where Mary Julia Baldwin was the principal). Letter, 8 Nov. 1870, Mrs. Jane M. Alexander to Lily giving details about the wedding of Mrs. Alexander's daughter (her step-daughter Marion Brackett Alexander, who married William Ellison Boggs). Letter, 16 Nov. 1870, from Marion Boggs to Lily about her wedding, her husband, and their prospective home. Letter, 18 Nov. 1870, from James O. Hagood to "My Dear Son" regarding the death of Hagood's brother James R. Hagood in a railroad accident. Letter of condolence, 20 Nov. 1870, from Ina Dunwody to the deceased's sister Augusta Columbia Hagood.
- 18 Two letters, 12 Oct. and 10 Dec. 1872, from E. M. Dunwody in Augusta to her "Aunty" (probably Jane Marion Dunwody Alexander). He writes of working on a railroad and his poor health. He is probably Edward M. Dunwody, a son of Henry Macon Dunwody. Letter, 31 Oct. 1874, to James B. Dunwody from an agent of the Port Royal Railroad (Beaufort) regarding a freight shipment. Passages of love poems are written on the front and back of this letter. Letter, 2 Nov. 1875, from Matilda E. Dunwody (widow of Henry M. Dunwody) to her brother mainly regarding some property and financial matters.
- 19 Letter, 31 Aug. 1880, Ina (Dunwody) Savage in Walterboro, S.C. to her husband Charles A. Savage mainly concerning family matters. Letter, 25 Nov. 1880, from Ina Savage to her husband. Letter, 26 April 1881, Ina to Charles Savage.
- 20 Letter, 11 April 1882, Marion B. Alexander Boggs (1842-1901), step-daughter of Jane Marion Dunwody Alexander, to Lily G. Dunwody regarding the death of her father

Adam L. Alexander. She describes his last hours, last words, and burial. Letter, 18 April 1882, Mrs. Jane M. Alexander to one of her children regarding her late husband. Letter, 17 Aug. 1882, Ina Savage to Charles Savage in Green Pond, S.C., partly concerning the death of their daughter. There are also recollections, 1882, of Alice van Yeveren Haskell (1848-1902) about her father's death and last words, as well as a similar memoir by his widow.

- 21 Letter, 10 Nov. 1882, Ina Savage in Walterboro to her aunt Mrs. A. L. Alexander concerning the death of her daughter Gussie (Augusta) Hagood Savage. Letter, 15 Dec. 1882, James Dunwody Bulloch (1823-1901) in Liverpool to his cousin Mrs. A. L. Alexander offering condolences on the death of her husband. Letter, Sept. 1882, from Ina Savage to her husband concerning her ill health. Letter, 25 June 1883 to Mrs. A. L. Alexander in Augusta, Ga. from her nephew John (probably John Henry Dunwody, 1852-1918, son of James B. Dunwody), who is farming in Florida. Letter, 11 Feb. 1884, from James B. Dunwody, Jr. in Cedar Keys, Florida, to his mother. Letter, 8 Oct. 1884, Lily Dunwody to her sister regarding the death of a child named George (probably Ina Savage's son). Letter, 15 July 1885, from James B. Dunwody in Augusta to his wife Carrie, mainly concerning his sister Mrs. A. L. Alexander, who is very ill. Letter, 30 Dec. 1884, James B. Dunwody to his wife Carrie. Letter, 6 Sept. 1885, Alice Dunwody (Alice Augusta Dunwody, 1854-1929, daughter of John Dunwody) in Atlanta, Ga. to her cousin Lily Dunwody regarding the grave of Mrs. A. L. Alexander in Washington, Ga. and other family matters.
- 22 Letter (fragment), 7 April 1886, to Carrie Dunwody probably from her sister-in-law Ellen C. Rice Dunwody (Mrs. C. A. Dunwody). Letter, 29 June 1886, from Isaac H. Means to his sister-in-law Carrie Dunwody concerning the death of his wife Alice Hagood Means (1835-1886). Letter, 10 Jan. 1888, James B. Dunwody to his wife. Letter, 18 Jan. 1888, Jessie S. (a child in Walterboro) to "Mamie." Letter, 30 Jan. 1888, from "Annie" in Macon, Ga. to her cousin Mary. Letter, 23 Aug. 1888, James B. Dunwody to his wife regarding her medical treatments, including the use of morphine. Letter, 8 April 1890, James B. Dunwody in Walterboro to his daughter Lily regarding his ministry in McPhersonville and family matters. Letter, 22 May 1890, James B. Dunwody to Lily (now addressed as Mrs. J. A. Waddell in Staunton, Va.). Letter, 13 Aug. 1890, Hetty A. Dunwody (1867-1897) at Dansville Sanitorium (N.Y.) to her father James B. Dunwody. Letter, 29 Nov. 1890, from "H.V.C." in Walterboro to Lily Dunwody, written just before her marriage. There are also two letters, 1890, from James B. Dunwody to his son John, written from Glenn Springs and Greenville, S.C.

BOX 2

- 1 Letter, 2 April 1891, James B. Dunwody in Walterboro to C. V. Walker & Company in Augusta, Ga. regarding his property in Augusta, with an added note to "My Darling." Letter, 22 April 1891, James B. Dunwody to his daughter Lily. He writes

- about a visit to McPhersonville, which he says was “looking sweeter than I have known it since the war,” and about visiting the grave of her mother (Laleah Pratt Dunwody, who died in 1853). He also writes about another minister, Edward Hutson, who has resigned to go to another church. Letter, 2 June 1891, James B. Dunwody in Walterboro to “Dearest Daughter” (probably Lily). Letters, 1891 and 1892, James B. Dunwody to one or more of his daughters, one of which concerns the death of Mattie Rice. Letters, 1892 and 1893, James B.
